

SAAR-MOSELLE TRIANGLE

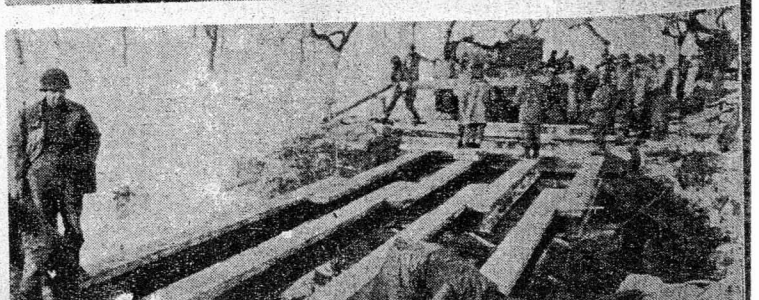

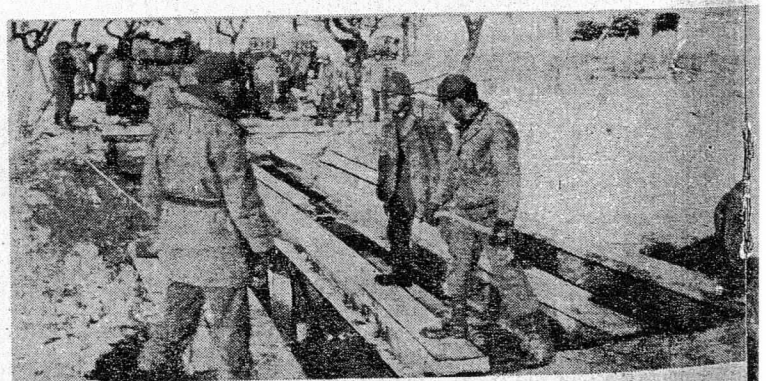

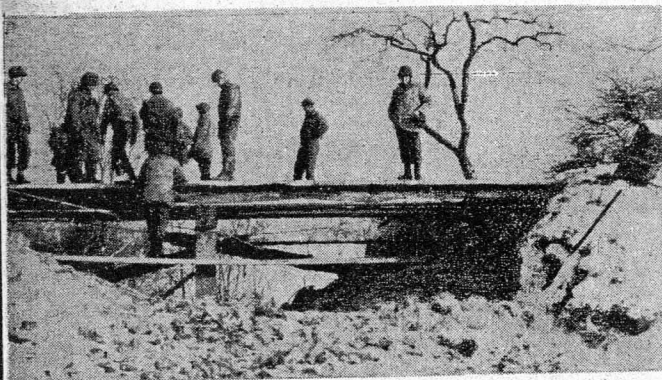

The outer shell of the Siegfried line had been cracked and the thrust that would crack through was moving ahead at top speed.

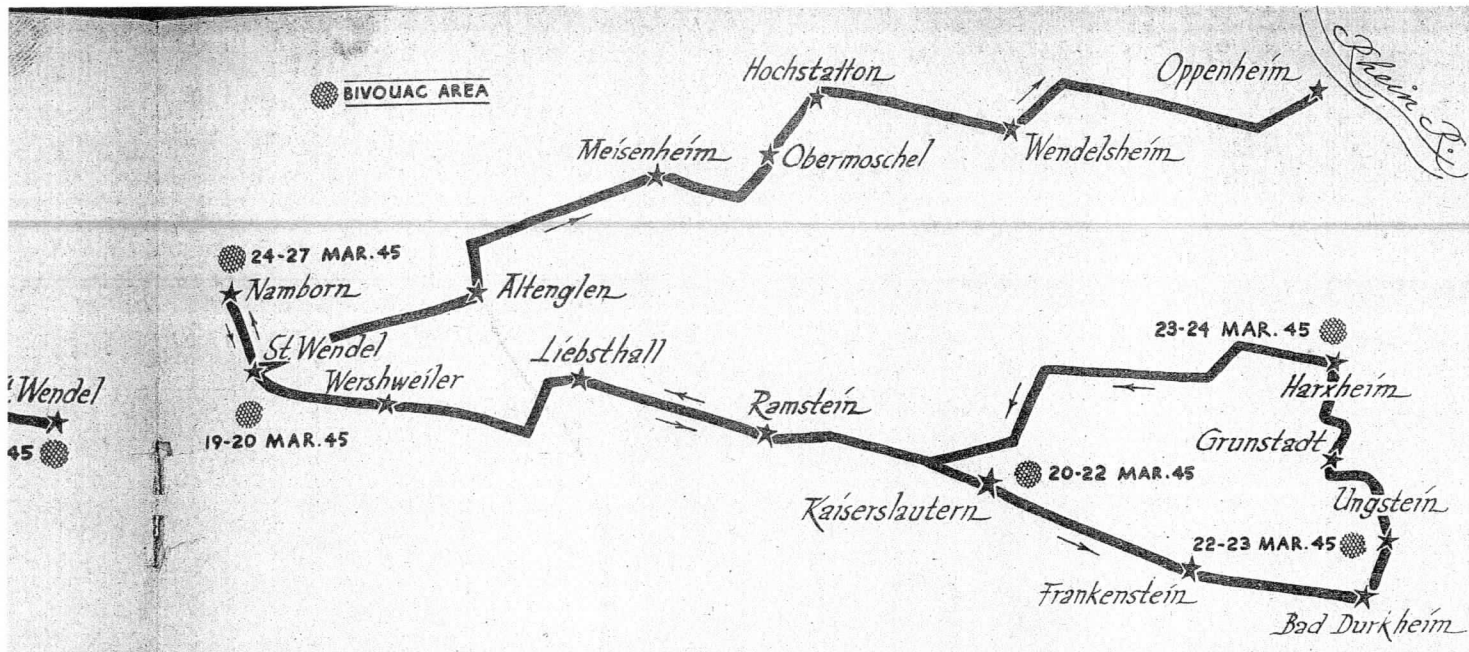

This was the time of the Third Army's breakthrough to the Rhine. Before the invasion, General Eisenhower had expressed hope that the Germans would make a stand west of the Rhine and this is exactly what they did. The larger the enemy forces that we could destroy this side of the Rhine, the simpler the allied task would be in the rest of Germany. When the breakthrough came General Eisenhower's order was "To destroy every German west of the Rhine".

In their desperate withdrawal, the German armies employed every means to delay our advance. Bridges were blown, log obstacles and craters blocked roads, minefields were sown with prodigious liberality. So, when, on the 17th of March the battalion assembly area moved to Niederlosheim, our work was cut out for us. Company "A" went to work on a 140 foot triple-double Bailey over the Primus River east of Neunkirchen. Company "C" constructed an 80 foot double single Bailey over an adjacent railroad. Company "C" removed road blocks and mines, and filled craters in the division M.S.R.

The battalion left the assembly area at Niederlosheim on the 19th of March and moved to St. Wendel where we maintained the approach road to the Autobahn at Ramstein, maintained the Bailey bridges at Simbach and cleared debris and blocks from the M.S.R.s. By the 20th of March, XX Corps reached Kaiserslautern after a 20 mile advance and made contact with Armored elements that had come down from Coblenz in the North. A few hours after Kaiserslautern had been taken, the 179th established their C.P. there. We removed vehicles from M.S.R.'s checked roads and bridges for demolitions, removed steel treadways from filled-in craters near St. Wendel and established a bridge dump.

Keeping up with the rapid advance, on the 22d of March the 179th moved to Ungstein where again our principal concern was with the M.S.R. roads that had to be cleared, improved and maintained, if the supplies needed to maintain the tremendous drive were to move freely. Road blocks were cleared, debris was removed from the roads, demolished buildings cleared to release trapped civilians.

On the 23d, we moved to Harxheim, where Company "C" constructed a 90 foot triple-single Bailey while the other line companies removed debris from the railroad underpass in Honsheim.

After a month of almost continuous movement, we moved back to Namborn, near St. Wendel for a brief rest. While there we were relieved of attachment to the 1139th Engineer Combat Group.

When the battalion left Namborn for Wendelsheim on the 27th of March, Company "A" remained behind to construct piers for a Bailey Bridge near Schwarzenbach and to improve a near-by pass. However, instead of stopping at Wendelsheim the battalion continued on.

The Rhine had been crossed in almost a dozen places and the "one good heaven" that Churchill said necessary to end the war, was on. There was to be no more prolonged stops until V-E day.

Crossing the Rhine at Oppenheim, south of Mainz, the battalion was placed under the operational control of the 1139th Engineer Combat Group and assigned the missions of crossing the assault waves of the 319th Infantry of the 80th Division across the Main River and of the construction and operation of infantry support rafts. "B" Company crossed the 1st Battalion at Bischopsheim. The first wave met with machine gun fire and several boats were damaged, forcing the men to swim ashore. But the answering fire from our guns silenced the enemy and succeeding waves crossed without incident. Company "C" crossed the 2d battalion at Rüsselsheim, a crossing that was so well prepared and executed that the entire battalion was over in 35 minutes without meeting any enemy opposition. "A" company constructed and operated three infantry support rafts under sporadic artillery fire and continued operation until a Treadway bridge was completed. On the 30th of March after reloading the assault boats and salvaging the ferrying equipment the battalion moved to Remsfeld.

At Remsfeld "A" Company cleared mines for the 3d Cavalry, "B" Company built 50 feet of corduroy road and built a 75 foot approach road. Company "C" built a 72 foot fixed M-2 Treadway bridge at Peieffe. On April 2d "B" Company after having had 2 men wounded by small arms fire, began construction of a 160 foot double-single Bailey.

The balance of the month was one of rapid movement. We were placed in direct support of the 6th Armored on their drive East from South of Kassel to the Central German Plain. The drive was made more difficult by the fact that available roads were poor and that the enemy had two rivers, the Fulda and Werra, to use as obstacles. As far as this unit was concerned, enemy activity was confined to small arms fire and bombing and strafing by occasional enemy aircraft. Roads in our sector of advance necessitated 24 hour maintenance.

After successive moves to Diedorf, Mühlhausen and Gotha, the battalion was placed in direct support of the 4th Armored Division on April 11th. This time we were fortunate in that the Autobahn paralleled our advance.

The few demolitions that the enemy was able to accomplish were quickly taken care of by short spans of Bailey, or, as in the case of the Saale River, by a short length of floating treadway. When finally the battalion reached a point west of Chemnitz, we were halted at Remse by orders from higher headquarters. On the 18th we were placed in general support of XX Corps operations and moved back and south a distance of 160 miles in one day to Gross Heirath to get in position to support the advance in its new direction.

With the Famous Fourth Armored Across Germany

The next stop was at Hirschaid, where as troops in general support of XX Corps, we guarded bridges and maintained roads in the area. When the battalion next moved to Lauf, on the 22d of April, "A" Company was given the task of running a nearby sawmill, while the other two line companies maintained the M.S.R.s. On the 25th we were in Neumarkt where "B" company constructed two 50 foot double single Bailey bridges in the vicinity. Company "C" moved further south to Etterzhausen to build a 90 foot double single Bailey.

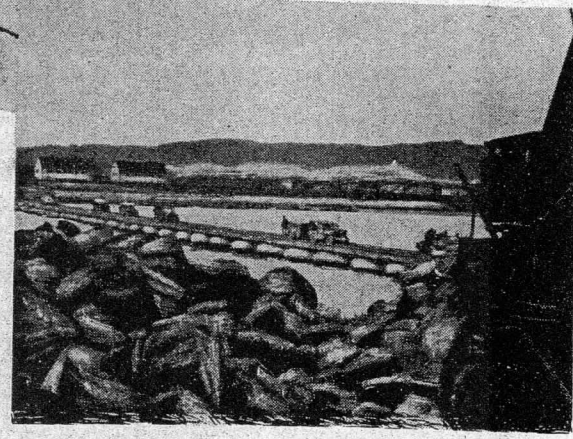

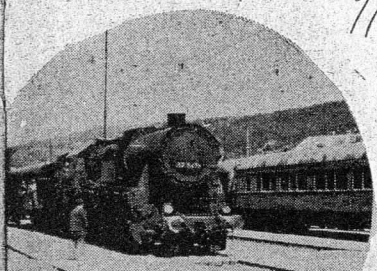

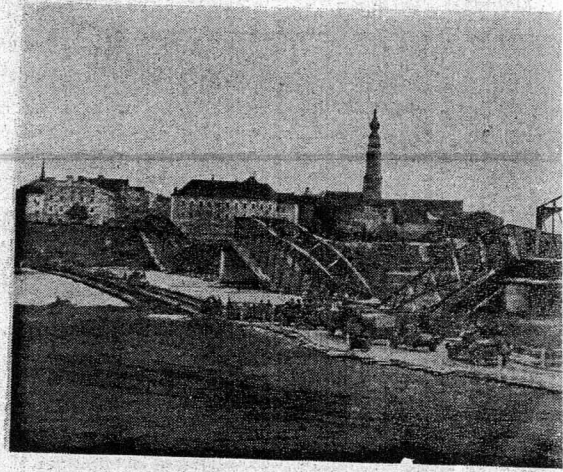

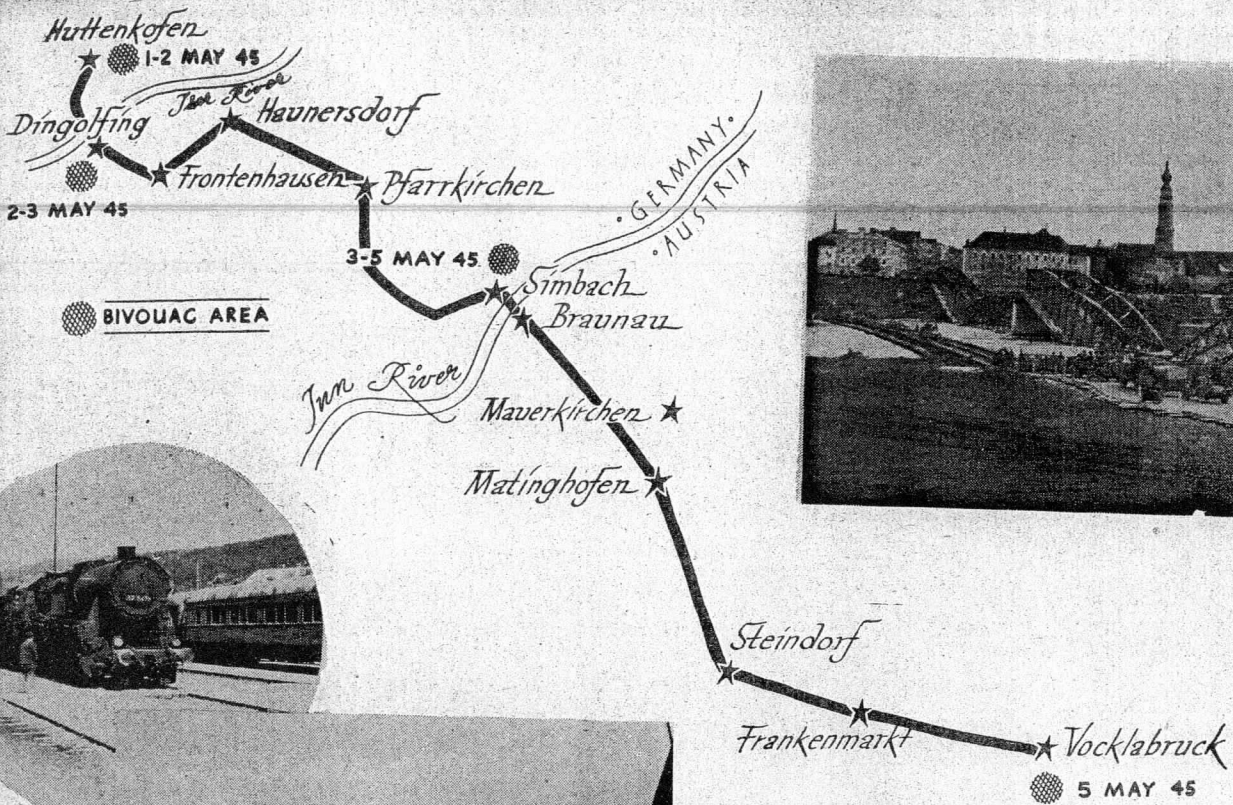

At this time German resistance was rapidly collapsing. The question on everybody's mind was whether the Germans would fight from the "redoubt area" and prolong the war. We were approaching this much talked of area, but no matter how quickly we moved, we could just barely keep up with our forces. One afternoon we would be up with the forward elements, the next morning we would be from 20 to 30 miles behind the lines. On the 28th after we had crossed the Danube at Regensburg, we were once again placed in direct support of the 80th Infantry Division in their drive to the south east.

"A" Company built a 60' double single Bailey at Puchausen and when the battalion moved to Huttenhofen on the 1st of May, they were assigned the mission of putting an M-2 Treadway bridge across the Isar at Dingolfing. Company "C" was to operate a ferry further downstream.

The war in Europe was rapidly approaching the end. But our work increased, rather than decreased. In a desperate effort to stop Dingolfing and put in 325 feet of plank approach road. Company "B" built two Bailyes, 60 feet and 80 feet in the vicinity.

The next river to cross was the Inn at Simbach. The river formed the boundry line between Germany and Austria, and Hitler's birthplace, Braunau lay on the Austrian side. The 179th build approximately a mile of plank road on the Braunau side of the river.

We moved to Vöcklabruck, Austria on the 5th of May. On the convoy we caught our first glimpse of the Alps. When the war ended three days later, we were supervising operation of the Austrian railroads to evacuate prisoners and bring in supplies.

the Third Army's "Nut Crackin" drive into the redoubt area, German demolition parties blew every bridge and every culvert they retreated over. When the battalion arrived in Huttenkofen we found that all bridges across the Isar in the division zone had been blown. Company "C" constructed and operated an M-2 treadway, while "A" Company built a 216 foot floating treadway at
