COMMISSIONED AND WARRANT OFFICERS

The rank of an officer is indicated by the number and width of stripes on his sleeve and shoulder boards. In addition to the insignia of ranks, officers of the several corps and warrant officers wear corps devices and qualifications above the insignia.

CHIEF PETTY OFFICERS AND PETTY OFFICERS

The rank insignia, consisting of stripes, chevrons, and specialty marks, of these petty officers and petty officers, naval and naval flight officers, and naval aviators, is divided into three classes: (1) those who have been appointed to their insignia; (2) those who have been appointed to their insignia by the commandant of their respective branch; and (3) those who have been appointed to their insignia by the chief petty officer of their respective branch.

TECHNICAL, FIREMAN, SEAMEN

The technical and other ratings of a non-commissioned officer, are indicated by the letters and numbers described by the letters and numbers. Many of the ratings, however, are not shown in the chart because they are not used in the United States Navy. TOOLS ARE WEAPONS!

...they serve best when used best.
Unlike weapons, they may have to last for the duration.

USE THEM WISELY...

7 TIPS TO SAVE YOUR TOOLS

SCREWDRIVERS Use the right-size driver blade and save the work and the blade. Don't use 'em for pry bars or chisels, or the handles for hammers.

CHISELS Don't use a flat chisel for a rivet-buster. The proper chisel will do a better job—faster.

PUNCHES A good mechanic will always use the right punch for the job.

SNIPS & SHEARS Use the right type, and your cutting job will be a cinch—besides leaving the blades serviceable for the next job.

PLIERS Don't cut a hot electric wire—or else! Don't use 'em for hammers. Yes, and try a wrench on that nut.

HAMMERS Don't use a midget on an elephant! The proper hammer will save the work—and you.

WRENCHES Use the right size wrench and save your knuckles. Don't increase pressure by hammering or using a length of pipe on the handle for extra leverage.

TRIBUTE TO THE UNCONQUERABLES

by Joseph Auslander

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE UNCONQUERABLE POLES

By
JOSEPH AUSLANDER

PRINTED BY EVERETT DAVIS

O MARTYRED Poland, brief and tragic Pole,
O people with great hearts and souls,
People of poetry, music, cathedrals, colleges, courage and beauty,
People with a proud imperative sense of honor and duty,
People with a long and noble history,
People of sorrow and mystery,
People of so many a dark hour, in this your darkest hour,
When, by the Hunnish lust for blood and power,
The flower
Of Polish manhood lies despoiled and spent
And split
In flame and ruin; all your strength had built,
The glooming monument,
The glory of your spirit and your mind
Blamed and railed, hammered black and blind;
The altars of your faith defiled,
And with lowd voices reviled
And broken—
Poor twisted shells where late the Lord had spoken!—
Under the savage chariots of lust,

In the indifferent dust
For any passing dog to find!

You were the first
Who, with unabashed eyes,
Faced his abominable lie,
And branded him accost;
Dared and endured his worst;
You cried it in the light
Of Poland burning bright,
Of Warsaw blazing, day and night.

After nineteen days of hell
Warsaw fell,
Then the New Order enveloped that smoldering citadel.
You crawled out of cellars and sewers and rubble,
From behind barricades and antitank traps,
And bomb-crater gaps,
Close to collapse,
Bloody and dirty and dazed,
Half crazed
With hunger and thirst and the Stokes and the smell.
You were given three days, more or less,
To clean up the mess—
The fifty thousand dead,
The piles of wounded, the blood,
The heaps of blunted bones,
The dust and desolation underfoot,
This horror overhead;
Then the triumphant forces,
The gun-tropping boot,
The twenty-four hours of license to loot,
The lowered cameras, the trucks loaded with baited bread,
The bands playing waltzes, toc-toc-toc-toc.

For Der Führer loves his meat, he loves it loud and long.
His ears may ring and quiver, but his stomach is quite strong.
So they blasted Chopin's statue
To the beat of German brass,
And shipped the melted metal to the Berchtesgaden sun.

One more insult leveled at you,
Write it down—and let it pass.

Write down the whole terrible inventory
Of murder and massacre and plunder,
Record the appalling story
In all its minutiæ, however gory—
The sacking of each home, each laboratory, Each library, church, convent, museum; the ripping amateur

Of books, the burning of books, the carts grazing under

Their daily haul,
The people falling flat on their faces
From hunger or bullets, in all kinds of places,
The blood-splattered walls,
The knocking on doors in the night,
The driving like cattle, the faces dead white,
The vast slaughterhouse from which there is no flight.

Executions en masse
By electric shock or lethal gas,
Or lined up along antitank trenches
And shot in the back of the head,
Or rotting in labor camps, or dropping dead

In the streets with their incredible stenches,
The women paraded out as whores
For the pleasure of privates and officers—precise blueprint of extermination
Of the Pole by every vicious device of annihilation.

You are not forgotten, Polish people:
The heat of liberation
For your nation
Will soon ring out from every steeple
Of your heroic land,
Through the thick curtain of steel and starvation and terror and silence we hear you;

Listen, we are creeping near you,
By Queen Jadwiga's love, by King Jagiello's lance,
What proud Paderewski dreamed, what brave Piłsudski planned—
The dawn of your deliverance
Flames at hand!

TRAPPED between the devil
And the deep blue sea,
You were laid low
With your long neutrality.
What is good faith good for?
Everything honor and decency stood for;
This is what you spill your blood for;
This is war.
The devil is running, the blue sea is deep,
So you sleep, warm in your walls
Innocence, and free;
So you slumbered,
Not dreaming your days of liberty were numbered.
Ah, sleep no more, Holland, sleep no more;
The Gauleiter of Darkness, the Overlord of Evil,
Hitler hath murdered sleep.

How merrily did the Master Race measure
Along the cloudless heaven at their leisure
The massacre of Rotterdam.
Opening their broad bays, oh, so slowly,
Tasting the fine deliberate pleasure
Like something holy,
As one might sow an acre freshly plowed.
So they sowed flame and death into the crowd.

A century
Of peace in five spring days
Provided among the tulips in full blaze, Sprawled dead among the hyacinths whose sweet smell
Heralded this last holocaust of May.
And hell
As well.
There are offenses so bad,
So rank
In the black chronicle of crime,
They give the soul
So huge a wrench
As leaves an everlasting stench
In the nostrils of time;
So the Rotterdam horror stank.
Even the murky aboriginal demons At ambush in the breast of slave and despoiler
Shrank from it.
And conscience itself recoils and sickens in one enormous vomit.

Before their honest and bewildered eyes,
Men dropping from the skies
In Dutch disguise...
Behold, the apostles of the new heroic morality
Of treachery
And robbery
And lies.
"We do not come as enemies,"
They blandly said,
And put a bullet through the farmer's head
And left him dead
In his own tulip bed.
The cattle grass
In the green meadows,
They gave
At the hallooing shadows
That roared and fell and rose and ran together
And all this quiet weather
At a breath
With shots, confusion, terror, blood and death.

Policemen, firemen, letter carriers, grocers, men Belting suddenly with hand grenades and grenades,
That amiable next-door neighbor,
The pastry cook's continually smiling lodger Whom he curled livid with an old stash of the salve—
Funny dodger—
The bicycle-shop keeper, so droll and sullen,
Whose pockets were always bulging with coins and ends—
All these good neighbors, good friends—
The Fifth Column!

Five days and nights of tumult, loud and vague
And monstrous like some vile nightmares out
Swarmed over The Hague,
The plague
Enveloped the Moerdijk Bridge as with a slippery fog.
Forget nothing; warm your hearts with the heroic lot;
Remember Waalhaven and the sailors fallen
With that good gallant vessel, the Van Galen.
Remember, through proud tears,
The battle of Korenwerderstrand;
The brave little band
Of Guardsmen
Storming the airships, again and again, reforming
Their shattered lines for still another storming.
Remember, all the days of your years,
That when the world stood tottering and shaken,
The like of the Zeebrugge was never taken.
Remember the night
Of Vicks and the dynamite. . . .
Remember . . . forget nothing . . . fight . . .
fight . . . fight . . .

PRAVDA VÍTEZI

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE UNCONQUERABLE CZECHOSLOVAKS

By JOSEPH AUSLANDER

PAINTING BY ALLEN FAULKNER

THIS is not a letter that starts,
"Dear So-and-So,"
And ends,
"Faithfully yours," Ah, no.
Brave hearts
And gallant friends,
This is a letter that a man
Heavy with words makes;
In my case, an ordinary American,
Whose hand shakes
Because, knowing the tremendous truth,
The words choke up in his mouth.

My mind goes back to Munich,
Goes back to the beginning—
The little Caesar, hand upraised, hand in tonic,
Gaping and glaring and grinning
Under his moustache; the cheers,
The "Sieg Heil" dinning
Drunken music in his ears;
My mind goes back
To the cowardly hives
Under the umbrella, under

The spine paraded where you were born around
To appease the Nazi appetite for plunder.

You were the blood-bright spur
To prick the languid conscience of this age;
You were the cage
Wherein the Executioner,
That arch-assassin,
Of all mad dogs the maddest,
Might practice the refinements of his rage;
The laboratory, soundproof, leisurely,
Clinical,
Where, quite beglared, impudic,
Muscoled and cynical,
The flood could vent
In hideous experiment
His hate of God and man, of saint and sage.

Hangmen die too;
Bullets from nowhere through the spine
Make hangmen white;
Turn hangmen's faces blue;
If they have long enough to remember,
They may recall
The name of one Jan Opletal,
Young medical student at Prague,
His death from wounds in the night,
His funeral,

The seventeenth of November;
The streets charred with Czech and Slovak youth; the sudden lances,
Deliberately provoked; the foremost fall,
Shot down by storm troopers; they burst,
they sprawl;
A few crawl
Away to die like any beaten dog.
This is only the curtain raiser; the epilogue Follows; the student hostels are surrounded,
Boys and girls riddled by Schmeisser,
Tortured, abused, pounded
Into submission; eyes gouged out, earlobes
Torn off, bashed From horror to horror. . . . Turn your face to the wall.
Hangmen; death will soon unfold in fog
The sickening sound, the smell, the sight
Of this blood-soaked Walpurgis Night.

But never, hangman, never from your face
Shall death or time or blood erase
That massacre of youth,
Nor any self-dog death pits hide one trace
Of their fierce love of truth;
Break the head
Of every stubborn hostage; shoot him dead
Until the earth runs red;
Others will stand in his stead.
You sow the dragon's tooth,
Bury a hundred Lillies to the ground,
New Lillies will spring up; the dead to space
Charred, choked with ashes,
And dead birds all around
Will consecrate a holy place Drenched with the blood that flames and ashes
Wherever Czechoslovakia and freedom's dream are found.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE UNCONQUERABLE GREEKS

By

JOSEPH AUSLANDER

PAINTING BY ROBERT WINGE

I WRITE this letter to you on my knees
In the night,
Of people of a thousand Thermopylae,
And every word I write,
If it be worthy somehow in your sight—
Sons of Salam, daughters of Pericles—
Will blaze with light.

Regard this letter
As token payment long since overdue
From your eternal debtor—
An echo burning through
The silence and the death piled thick on you By fire and sword, by famine and by fetter...

An echo of the trumpet Plato blew
Across another darkness that men knew,

Not by an honorable law,
In equal combat, blow for blow,
Under a decent sky,
Beneath the impartial sun,
Were you undone
And left to die.
Ah, no!
But by each sharper nose
The wolf and buzzard nose;
Stalked by that obscene pack
In stealthy and abominable attack, Struck down at last when, faint with longer,
You could no longer
Stand and strike back.

And when you fell, you fell like some great star,
Not broken by defeat or pale surrender,
But falling in dreadful splendor,
Forever falling and falling,
And earth and heaven and the towers of time, both near and far,
Were shaken with the sheets of terror falling,
And the blood-red wheels of war,
Bright and brawling,
Across the firmament streaked a livid war,
So you went down; yet, in your dying, cast A shadow across the craters of the moon as you...

As bright,
At the Archangel's trumpet blast
Of light,
A shadow upon the hearts of men as well,
To stretch our souls from heaven down to hell?

This we declare:
By all men in extremity everywhere,
By earth and water, by fire and air,
We solemnly swear:
Home is not dead,
The lion that lived
Ulysses will again
Reign such men
(The spirit of Rousseau, of Byron,
The Macrocosmata breed
Of iron).
This is our creed:
The sun
That now
Fascist and Hun
Cleared from the land of Demosthenes
Will once more in amazement stare upon The Parthenon!

This, then, is all:
I have said everything:
The wormwood, the gall,
The courage, the suffering;
Nothing can be
As big as agony,
And agony is king, and can speak
Only in Greek.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE UNCONQUERABLE NORWEGIANS

By JOSEPH AUSLANDER

PAINTING BY STEVEN KROVATIN

I KNOW you, Norway!
Your blood runs bright in my little daughter,
Your beauty runs warm and wild
In my girl child.
You are a queen, standing in a doorway,
Staring out over the long water,
Remembering the ships, Remembering the boys and girls with yellow hair.

And the laughter struck dead on their lips,
You are a woman with a beautiful name,
Remembering how the new barbarians came,

I see you as I saw you long ago,
Standing so,
Lingered in the doorway
Of your blue water,
O noble Norway,
Whose blood runs bright in my little daughter,
The evening was warm,
The twilight long,
The summer sun
Fastened gold tigranails to the horizon in a slow Reluctant afterglow.
That was before the storm,
That was before the blow,
That was before the fire,
The steel-winged swan,
Swept the sweet land with flame,
That was before the new barbarians came,

I remember the small farms
That cover the countryside
With harvests of courage and pride,
And the women with open arms
Welcoming the sickly German lad, Giving the German boy the last they had,
Feeding them at the table with their own sons—

These were the same, the very same
Who came back later, who came
With daughter and sons,
With tanks and guns,
With bayonets and bombs,
To the friendly houses,
To their foster fathers and mothers,
To their foster sisters and brothers,
Speaking the language with all its charms,
Speaking all its grates,
Spitting it into the people's faces.

I see you as I saw you that last long summer
Before the hammer
Let loose hell,
Before the sky fell
In flame,
You are the same proud people, yet not the same;
Your eyes are frozen blue steel,
Your mouths are stone,
Your hands hard as iron;

There are faces I do not see, but feel.
Many are gone;
Some dead—never mind how, just dead
For something their hands did, their mouths said,
Their eyes read,
Some red
In little fishing boats, in leaky boats,
By night, on skis, on skates,
To England, to Canada, to the United States;
Some stained the snow, the water, the ground;
Some drowned
And were never found.

They will return,
O Norway, mother of heroes,
Mother of patriots,
Mother of men!
They will come back from everywhere,
By sea, land and air—
They will come back, and then
There will be shots;
They will burn
The fifth of the Nazi Nazis;
There will be a tremendous house-cleaning.
The sky will be washed free
Of the foulness, the insanity,
Your young eagles will give the sky over
Norway a new meaning.
Every street, house, factory,
Every farm and field
Will have to be searched and healed.
This will take time, beloved land,
But I shall again see you stand
Like a queen called home from heroic exile, the church bells ringing,
The people crying and laughing and cheering and singing!
You will look out over the long blue water,
The clean light on your hair
As you linger there
In your doorway,
Ah, dear mother of my little daughter!
Norway!

TURN OFF THE LIGHT

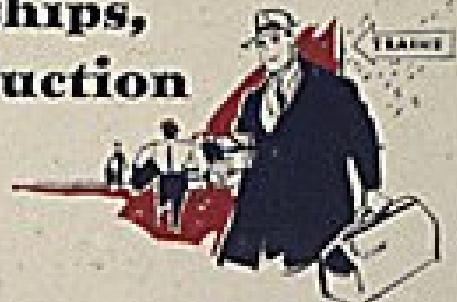

Twas the day after Christmas,
And all through the works
Not a creature was stirring—
Not even the clerks.

But afar in the battle
On land, sea and air,
Brave lads fought through Christmas—
No Santa was there.

The things that they fight with—
The guns, tanks and ships,
Were delayed in production
By holiday trips.

So let us remember
Amid our good cheer,
We must stay at our work—
Or regret it next year.
